Province's leaders warm to federal infrastructure plans

Harper announces details. Provincial, municipal officials give Building Canada tentative thumbs-up after learning more

MARCO VIGLIOTTI
Metro in Regina

Saskatchewan provincial and municipal leaders offered a tempered reaction on Thursday to the federal government's revamped $14-billion Building Canada infrastructure program.

Government Affairs Minister Jim Reiter said the province is excited to finally learn more about the crucial 10-year spending plan, but stressed that additional information continues to be needed from Ottawa.

"We are happy we're starting to get some information. We've got a lot of infrastructure projects we would like to get on their way," Reiter told Metro after Prime Minister Stephen Harper announced details that were not included when the federal draft budget was unveiled on Tuesday.

"There are still going to be a lot more details that need to be worked out."

The Harper government's infrastructure program earmarks $10 billion for provincial and territorial projects, including $1 billion for communities with fewer than 100,000 residents.

Each province will receive a base sum of $250 million and an additional per capita allocation.

Provincial Finance Minister Ken Krawetz said earlier this week that Saskatchewan could expect to receive only $15 million in the first year of the program — with that allocation to increase in future years.

The remaining $4 billion under Building Canada will be set aside for projects of national significance.

Provincial officials will work with Ottawa in the coming weeks to learn more about the recently hatched funding scheme, Reiter said.

Municipal leaders in Saskatchewan also voiced measured enthusiasm for the program but expressed concerns about a tight time-frame, as funds are expected to begin flowing on March 31.

"We have some concerns … about the details," said Regina Mayor Michael Fougere, citing questions about criteria to be used to evaluate programs and the speed with which funding will reach the city.

Don Atchison, mayor of Saskatoon, echoed those concerns but remains optimistic about the benefits the program could provide to his booming city.

"We don't have all the details yet, but we have a wonderful understanding of what they're going to be," Atchison said.

"It aligns with a lot of the projects we want to do in Saskatoon." WITH FILES FROM JACOB MORGAN

Penalties laid in real estate fraud

Fines have been laid in a real estate scheme that cost Saskatchewan residents $3 million.

The Financial and Consumer Affairs Authority has fined Landbankers International $50,000 and ordered the company to stop trading in or acquiring securities.

The authority says Landbankers raised millions from several Saskatchewan residents to allegedly develop a stretch of beachfront property in Mexico.

Warning

High water levels forecast for spring

Saskatchewan's Water Security Agency says the Saskatoon, North Battleford and Prince Albert regions could be facing some significant challenges in the spring run-off.

The threat of higher-than-normal water levels is forecasted for a band stretching across the middle of the province to the Alberta and Manitoba boundaries.

However, the agency also cautions that the February runoff forecast is based on limited precipitation data and should be used as a general guide for large areas.

Aboriginal students are hitting the books in record numbers at the University of Saskatchewan.

The university says data show nearly 2,000 students — about 10 per cent of the total student body — declared their aboriginal ancestry this academic term.

Candace Wasacase-Lafferty, the university's director of aboriginal initiatives, says the gap is closing between the number of aboriginal students and the aboriginal population in the province.

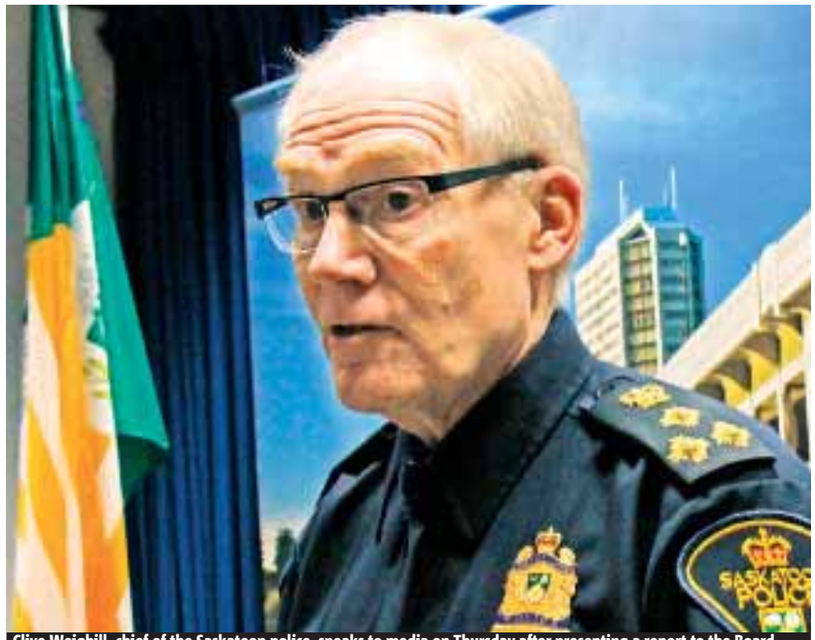
Report. Weighill continues push for detox facility for addicts after man's death in police custody



Clive Weighill, chief of the Saskatoon police, speaks to media on Thursday after presenting a report to the Board of Police Commissioners about changes made following the death of Brandon Travis Daniels. JACOB MORGAN/METRO

Saskatoon Police Service Chief Clive Weighill wants to put a wedge in the revolving-door system of addiction treatment.

Weighill submitted a report to the Board of Police Commissioners on Thursday responding to a coroner's inquest into the death of 19-year-old Brandon Travis Daniels, who died in 2010 while under police custody.

The report highlights steps taken to improve the conditions of shelters and holding cells in the city, but Weighill said the work is far from over when it comes to care for recurring addicts.

"We really need some type of facility in Saskatoon so when people get up in the morning, they can get the treatment they require rather than having to wait a month to see a health professional," said Weighill.

"Time and time again people are willing to get help — they've got it in their mind that they want to change their life — but unfortunately they can't get into the health system."

He added that many of those drunk or high on a regular basis circle through the available detox facilities, and a fully integrated wellness centre is necessary to correct this.

Drew Bilboe, the residential program director at the Salvation Army in Saskatoon, works with police to take intoxicated people off the streets during the winter. He said he has gotten used to seeing familiar faces around the men's hostel on Avenue C South.

"A few guys are alcoholics and they just bounce from one place to another and don't deal with their problems," he said. "It's just a cycle of addiction and poverty."

Tracy Muggli, the director of mental health and addiction services at the Saskatoon Health Region, is a member of the Action Accord group, which was formed three years ago to help the SPS address medical needs.

Some of the positive changes the collaboration has introduced, she said, include paramedics in jail cells and the Lighthouse Supported Living emergency shelter.

However, she said it could still be some time before the wellness centre becomes a reality.

"We haven't entered too deeply into understanding what exactly the gaps and needs are in relation to a wellness centre," said Muggli. "I would say the concept of a wellness centre is in its infancy stages in terms of us working together as a group to understand those gaps and needs."

Saskatchewanians amorous but not adventurous: Poll

Valentine's Day. Expect some kind of gift, survey indicates, even if it's only a heart-shaped pizza

SARAH TAGUIAM
Metro in Regina

From cards and candlelight dinners to chocolates and flowers, Saskatchewanians are generally optimistic about Valentine's Day and prefer to celebrate it the traditional way, a survey has found.

Among about 800 people polled by Saskatoon-based Insightrix Research Inc., 70.5 per cent of those in a romantic relationship said they will celebrate on Feb. 14.

Still, five per cent professed their hatred for the day.

"What really struck me is how low the percentage of people who hate Valentine's is," said Insightrix senior researcher Mario Caceres.

"It seems that people in Saskatchewan are pretty positive."

Caceres believes the optimists like Valentine's because it gives them something active to do, despite the cold.

Thirty-four per cent of Saskatchewanians dine out on Valentine's Day, while others celebrate by giving presents such as cards (35.5 per cent), candies and chocolates (26 per cent) or flowers (19 per cent).

Fourteen per cent said they're waiting for the last minute to decide on gifts, while 11 per cent said they're not giving at all.

"Giving flowers and other traditional things is still pretty popular," said Eric Galbraith, an employee at Gale's Florist in Regina. "It's what a lot of people expect because it shows a certain sentiment."

D.J. Widenmaier-Smith, manager at a Hallmark store in Saskatoon's Midtown Plaza, said their customers are of all ages.

"We're getting anywhere from 13 to 15 (years old) and people in their 80s coming in," Widenmaier-Smith said.

First Nations chiefs tasked with cutting deficit

Perry Bellegarde, chief of the Federation of Saskatchewan Indian Nations, addresses their legislative assembly on Thursday at Dakota Dunes Casino on the Whitecap Dakota First Nations. MORGAN MODJESKI/METRO

The future of the Federation of Saskatchewan Indian Nations (FSIN) is in the hands of its chiefs.

The FSIN has tasked tribal, agency and grand council chiefs across Saskatchewan with finding cost savings within their communities to address a deficit of approximately $2.2 million.

As a result of cuts in federal funding during the past two years, the FSIN has issued layoff notices to 66 employees, effective March 31.

To ensure the longevity of the organization, its legislative assembly voted on Thursday to have individual chiefs assess programs to look for ways to reduce spending.

Their findings will be discussed at a meeting on Feb. 24.

If chiefs are unable to find a solution come April 1, changes are planned at the FSIN.

"We're evolving," FSIN Chief Perry Bellegarde told the assembly at Dakota Dunes Casino.

"Remember when we had eight vice-chiefs, down to five vice-chiefs? And there may be no vice-chiefs — we don't know yet, but that's the impact."

He added that "there will always be a federation, no question. But its structure, shape and form will evolve."

If the FSIN can't cut into the deficit, Bellegarde said, it could leave vice-chiefs, community commissions and treasury boards in communities across Saskatchewan without money for travel.

The legislative assembly voted down several options, including scenarios that would inject money into the FSIN through revenue and trusts from the Saskatchewan Indian Gaming Authority.

The legislative assembly will hold a special meeting on March 20 to discuss and consider recommendations.

Animal welfare. Another Danish zoo considers killing healthy giraffe

Death threats sent to Copenhagen Zoo, which last weekend killed a healthy giraffe named Marius and fed it to lions in front of a young audience, have not deterred another Danish zoo from the same course of action.

Jyllands Park Zoo is seeking a female giraffe that would replace one of its two males — a seven-year-old, also named Marius.

The zoo claims the animal could not stay without threatening the breeding programme, and would be difficult to re-house.

"If we are told we have to euthanize (the giraffe) we would of course do that," Jyllands Park zookeeper Janni Løjtved Poulsen told Denmark's TV2, adding that she was "completely behind" Copenhagen Zoo's decision.

An online petition demanding Jyllands Park "transfer (Marius) to alternative accommodation and spare his life" reached 4,000 signatures in a matter of hours. A spokesman for animal welfare group PETA gave support for the campaign: "Zoos keep animals on display like living museum exhibits and dispose of them when they become inconvenient."

CSEC. Watchdog review clears spy agency's airport data experiment

A federal watchdog says Canada's electronic eavesdropping agency did not invade the online activities of Canadians during a controversial study of wireless communication at airports.

The independent body that monitors Communications Security Establishment Canada says the spy agency's effort wasn't about mass surveillance or the tracking of Canadians.

A CSEC document obtained by CBC — originally leaked by former U.S. spy contractor Edward Snowden — suggested information was taken from an unidentified Canadian airport's free Wi-Fi system over a two-week period.

In a new posting on its website, the CSEC watchdog says it has since questioned eavesdropping agency employees about the project.

It says the effort was used by CSEC to understand global communication networks and was not directed at Canadians or people in Canada.

Is our focus on hockey a detriment in Sochi?

Winter Olympics. Expert says the rest of Canada could learn something from Quebec, which does a good job of supporting all athletes —not just ones from the NHL

DAVE LANGFORD
Metro in London

At noon EST Thursday, the Olympics in Sochi changed — and some people are suggesting not for the better.

That was when the Canadian men's hockey team took to the ice against Norway and began their 11-day pursuit of the Olympic gold medal.

So despite Patrick Chan beginning his chase for the elusive Canadian dream of winning the first men's singles figure-skating title, most Canadians were glued to TV sets in homes, offices and bars to watch Sidney Crosby, Drew Doughty and other NHLers.

Dr. Janice Forsyth, director of the International Centre for Olympic Studies at Western University, said the non-NHL athletes need more support, at least for the 17 days of the Sochi Games.

"This intensive focus that we have on hockey is understandable from a cultural point of view, but I think the media isn't doing our athletes in our sport system any favours by not giving the other athletes their due attention," Forsyth said.

Forsyth said even though the women's hockey coverage has improved, it has nowhere near the same interest as the men.

"In Canada, there is just that intensive focus that we have on hockey — and it's mostly around men's hockey, let's face it. It's really challenging when you don't see the other athletes getting as much attention," she said.

Forsyth said the focus on men's hockey is a "detriment to the other sports."

"It's because the NHL is taking a break and they're trying to generate excitement from the NHL crowd in the Olympic Games, just spinning the NHL model a different way, this time where the athletes actually represent their country," she said.

"In terms of trying to support the other athletes and generating support, it's not necessarily a good thing."

There is more balanced coverage of all athletes in Quebec, she said.

"We could actually learn a lesson from Quebec because they really do hold up their athletes as role models, and not just the hockey players," Forsyth said.

"They've got a really good funding base in the province, they've got good opportunities for sponsors — of course corporate sponsors step up the plate — and media is very supportive of all of the athletes."

Canada's hockey obsession

"In terms of trying to support the other athletes ... it's not necessarily a good thing."

Ice, snow storms wallop U.S. East Coast, South

Relentless winter. More than 750,000 homes and businesses without power

The latest storm to roll off nature's assembly line this winter spread heavy snow and sleet along the U.S. Northeast corridor Thursday, while utility crews in the ice-encrusted South laboured to restore power to hundreds of thousands of shivering residents.

The sloppy weather shuttered schools and businesses, grounded more than 6,000 flights on Thursday alone and created more back-breaking work for people along the East Coast, where shovelling has become a weekly chore — sometimes a twice-weekly one.

"Snow has become a four-letter word," said Tom McGarrigle, chairman of the Delaware County Council, in suburban Philadelphia, where a fourth snowstorm above 15 cm in one season marked a historic first.

Baltimore awoke to 38 centimetres of snow. Washington, D.C., had at least 20, shutting down federal offices and the city's two main airports. New York City took nearly 25 centimetres, parts of New Jersey 28. Boston expected 10 to 15, while Connecticut and Massachusetts were looking at 30 or more.

Treacherous

At least 18 dead

At least 18 deaths, most of them in traffic accidents, were blamed on the storm as it made its way across the South and up the coast.

Among the victims was a pregnant woman who was struck and killed by a snowplow in New York City. Her baby was delivered in critical condition via Caesarean section.

The dead also included a man hit by a falling tree limb in North Carolina and a truck driver in Ashburn, Va., who was working to clear snowy roads. He was standing behind his vehicle when he was hit by a dump truck.

BASE jump. Man in video parachuting off Whistler gondola wanted by RCMP

A dramatic YouTube video that shows a couple hooting and hollering in a gondola at the Whistler ski resort before the man leaps off and unfurls a parachute nearly half a kilometre above the valley has turned the jumper into both an Internet hit and a wanted man.

In the video, which by Thursday had been viewed more than 130,000 times, a young man dons a helmet cam and steps out of a cabin hanging from the Peak 2 Peak gondola, which connects Whistler and Blackcomb mountains.

Then he jumps, parachuting safely into the valley below.

Now, police have arrested a 23-year-old woman and are looking for the jumper, believed to be a 25-year-old Ontario man living in Vancouver.

RCMP Staff Sgt. Steve LeClair said police plan to recommend charges of mischief over $5,000 against the man.

The woman was arrested on Wednesday and may face charges of obstruction of justice and mischief over $5,000.

Afghan women protest domestic violence law

Article 26 limits justice for abused.
100 women march through Kabul

Afghan women marched in Kabul on Thursday to protest violence against women and decry a new draft law that activists say will severely limit justice for victims of domestic abuse.

Afghanistan's parliament recently passed a new criminal procedure code that would ban people from testifying against their own relatives.

Legal experts say the law would curb prosecutions involving violence against women, where relatives are often the only witnesses.

While the new legislation, known as Article 26, does not specifically mention women or domestic violence, it bars a broad swath of "relatives" from acting as witnesses, which presents a problem in a country where women are often cloistered at home and the bulk of violence committed against them is either by or in front of family members.

In practice, legal experts say, it would mean that a woman cannot testify that her uncle raped her, that a mother who sees her daughter beaten by her father or brother cannot testify, that family members witnessing a young woman being forced into marriage by her father cannot be used in a prosecution, that a sister or brother who witnesses an honour killing cannot be questioned.

Pink Panther gang. Spain arrests suspected jewelry thief of notorious group

A suspected member of the notorious Pink Panther gang of jewelry thieves believed responsible for hundreds of robberies across the world has been arrested in Spain, police said Thursday.

Borko Ilincic, 33, was arrested in the central town of Alcalá de Henares on Tuesday, police said in a statement. The Serbian was carrying a false Bosnian passport.

A National Court official said a judge on Wednesday ordered that Ilincic be kept in jail while the United Arab Emirates starts extradition proceedings. He can be held up to 40 days.

The official spoke on condition of anonymity because the regulations of his job bar him from identifying himself by name.

Interpol says Ilincic is a suspect in the 2007 Wafi Mall robbery in Dubai where the robbers made off with around 11 million euros ($16.5 million CAD) in jewelry.

Russia meets with Egypt to promote closer ties

Russian President Vladimir Putin, right, shakes hands with Egypt's military chief, Field Marshal Abdel-Fattah el-Sissi, in the Novo-Ogaryovo residence outside Moscow on Thursday. 'I wish you success.' Putin's statement could be a reflection of predictions in Egypt that el-Sissi will win the presidential vote

Russian President Vladimir Putin on Thursday wished Egypt's military chief victory in the nation's presidential vote, even though he has yet to announce his bid — a strong endorsement signalling Moscow's desire to expand its military and other ties with a key U.S. ally in the Middle East.

Putin appeared to be capitalizing on a growing move by Gulf nations — particularly Saudi Arabia — to move the Middle East off its traditional reliance on the United States.

Egyptian Field Marshal Abdel-Fattah el-Sissi's visit to Moscow comes amid reports of a $2 billion Egyptian arms deal with Russia to be funded mainly by Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates, which is part of Egypt's shift to reduce reliance on the United States.

"The United States' influence is steadily waning in the region for several years," said Gamal Abdel-Gawad, a political analyst at Cairo's Al-Ahram Center for Political and Strategic Studies. "Traditional allies like the Saudis are becoming more and more suspicious, and U.S. credibility in the region is at stake."

Without naming the United States, the Kremlin criticized what it regards as U.S. interference in the internal affairs of other countries. Russia's ties with the U.S. have been badly strained by disputes ranging from Syria's civil war, to missile defence plans in Europe, to Moscow's human rights record.

Would you pay to be locked up?

They'll let you out ... eventually. Escape games force players to use wits to win their freedom

KATE WEBB
Metro in Vancouver

If you've ever wanted to pay to be locked in a room from which you must complete puzzles to escape, then this new Richmond, B.C. game facility is for you.

EXIT has four themed rooms: The Lost Ship, Ancient Egypt, Prison Escape and Laboratory Escape. Groups of anywhere from two to six people have 45 minutes to figure out how to get out by using critical thinking skills to solve challenges and riddles.

"It involves a lot of different skills to solve," said owner Justin Tang, who discovered the concept in his homeland of Hong Kong, where it is wildly popular.

"You need some basic math and you need teamwork, so it's not only thinking; it might be some action where you have to co-operate with a teammate."

The "real life escape room" business was inspired several years ago by "escape room" video games popularized in Japan, and has already taken off in the U.S., England, Switzerland, Japan, Taiwan, Malaysia, Thailand and Mainland China.

Swiss company Adventure Rooms has a similar facility in Kitchener, Ont.

Tang said business is booming and he has already had about 7,000 players come through since he opened in October.

"I've been in Canada for over 16 years, and I really think that, especially in British Columbia, we need more entertainment," he said, chuckling.

"I explored around the world and I found this idea, and I think that Canadians definitely enjoy this kind of experience, and so far what I've heard from my customers is positive."

Tang added he has already had franchise inquiries from San Francisco, Montreal and Toronto.

He has booked players as young as nine, but because of the sophistication of the game, he said it is recommended for ages 16 and up. The cost per game is $22.99 per person plus GST.

Facebook expands its gender identity choices

You don't have to be just male or female on Facebook anymore. The social media giant is adding a customizable option with about 50 different terms people can use to identify their gender as well as three preferred pronoun choices: him, her or them.

Facebook said the changes, set to launch on Thursday, initially cover the company's 159 million monthly users in the U.S. and are aimed at giving people more choices in how they describe themselves, such as androgynous, bi-gender, intersex, gender fluid or transgender.

"There's going to be a lot of people for whom this is going to mean nothing, but for the few it does impact, it means the world," said Facebook software engineer Brielle Harrison, who worked on the project and is herself undergoing gender transition, from male to female.

Facebook staffers said the expanded options were never questioned, from CEO Mark Zuckerberg on down.

"Really, there was no debate within Facebook about the social implications at all," said Alex Schultz, director of growth. "It was simple: Not allowing people to express something so fundamental is not really cool so we did something. Hopefully a more open and connected world will, by extension, make this a more understanding and tolerant world." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

How to protect consumers?

Goliath Comcast grows even larger with Time Warner

Comcast is creating a dominant force in American entertainment and presenting federal regulators with an equally outsized quandary: How should they handle a conglomerate that promises to improve cable TV and Internet service to millions of homes but also consolidates unprecedented control?

Comcast, which was already the nation's No. 1 pay TV and Internet provider, says its $45.2 billion US purchase of Time Warner Cable will provide faster, more reliable service to more customers. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Survey

Are Canadians cutting the cord?

Another new poll suggests so-called cord cutting may be growing in Canada.

Nearly a quarter of the respondents in an online survey conducted by Ipsos Reid in recent weeks said they did not have a traditional TV subscription. The selection of streamable online content and access to free over-the-air TV signals have convinced some to cut the cord.

But, in November, the Convergence Consulting Group estimated about 400,000 Canadian TV subscribers out of 11.8 million have cut the cord since 2011, which is about 3.5 per cent of the market. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Lac-Mégantic victims aim to sue Ottawa

Quebec train disaster.
Class-action lawsuit has expanded, claiming government was 'grossly negligent' in oversight

Victims of the Lac-Mégantic train disaster want to sue Ottawa for allegedly failing to prevent a railway with the poorest safety record in North America from shipping highly explosive cargo through their town.

A runaway train carrying crude oil derailed last summer and exploded in the centre of the Quebec community, killing 47 people and destroying part of the downtown core.

The lead lawyer for an existing class-action suit has now expanded the long list of defendants to include the Attorney General of Canada, which delegates regulatory powers to the Canadian Transportation Agency and Transport Canada.

In the document, lead lawyer Daniel Larochelle alleges Transport Canada did not sufficiently sanction the Montreal, Maine & Atlantic Railway, even though the department was aware of the company's repeated violations, including train drivers allegedly failing to apply a sufficient number of brakes. THE CANADIAN PRESS

First filed in July

The class-action was first registered in July and targets numerous defendants, including the MM&A, its chairman Ed Burkhardt, train driver Tom Harding and companies allegedly responsible for the crude oil on board the train.

- The amendment to the suit, presented Wednesday in a Quebec court, was added the same week Ottawa agreed to lift the ceiling on how much cash it will pay toward the decontamination and rebuilding of Lac-Mégantic.

Growing world market for drones with sales set to double by 2024

Military brass shopping at Asia's biggest defence expo this week have drones high on their to-buy list. But for U.S. manufacturers, including General Atomics, which makes the Predator hunter-killer, there's one problem: they can only sell to a few countries because of tight export restrictions.

The controls give rival drone makers from countries such as Israel and China a chance to win more business in the growing global market for unmanned aerial vehicles, which one group forecasts to more than double in the next decade.

U.S. arms makers have been lobbying the government for several years to loosen the restrictions so they can sell their systems to more countries. They fear their established market is shrinking as domestic defence spending is squeezed and the U.S. military withdraws from Iraq and Afghanistan.

American aerospace companies are showing off the latest missiles, attack helicopters and fighter jets at the Singapore Airshow but they may find foreign rivals have the upper hand in cutting more deals for drones, also known as unmanned aerial vehicles.

"There are countries like Israel and China that have weapons-capable aircraft and they can sell, so it definitely hampers us with business not just in this region but around the world because we cannot compete," said Billy Gililland, president of systems integration at General Atomics Aeronautical Systems Inc.

Beer.

Molson sales fizzle in Canada

Molson Coors Brewing is hiking its dividend by 16 per cent despite a flat beer market in Canada.

The international beer company says its sales in the United States and Europe did well in the fourth quarter while its Canadian operations struggled due to several factors.

Part of the reason for the weak results from Canada was the lower value of the loonie compared with the U.S. dollar, but Molson Coors said it also faced promotional challenges and soft consumer demand.

The company said its Canadian pre-tax income was down 14 per cent to $88.9 million US and, even in Canadian currency, was down nine per cent from a year earlier. THE CANADIAN PRESS

THE METRO LIST

1 #GoCanadaGo. There's no greater story than three hot sisters representing our country at the Olympics. The fact that two of them beat everyone else was just a welcome bonus. To the Dufour-Lapointe family of Quebec, I say "Bravo!" because they deserve it, and also because it's the same word in French and I don't want to offend Pauline Marois.

2 What a luger. After finishing 22nd in men's luge, American Tucker West became talk of the tweets when his dad told the world he was single and shy. Moments later he had prom invitations, marriage proposals, and I imagine, some freaky propositions. Like I always suspected: Ladies love luge. #TeamTucker

3 American Idol. Fresh off their flights, contestants were assembled at an airport hangar outside LAX where some were asked to re-audition. Judges divided the group into one bus headed for the hotel, and another directly back to the airport. They could have done it before departure, but apparently once you tell someone they're going to Hollywood, you actually have to take them to Hollywood.

4 Playing ball. Missouri college football star Michael Sam declared his homosexuality and lit up every media possible. Some of the NFL's execs and coaches issued an "anonymous" statement to Sports Illustrated saying that they expect Sam's draft position to drop, and added "I don't think football is ready for an openly gay player yet." It's true, the NFL is not ready to handle the fact that those are their best players.

5 Bieb-wacked. Blake Griffin is the star power forward for the L.A. Clippers: 24 years-old, an all-star, rich, talented and possessing an inspirational work ethic. A hero. So when a false rumour circulated that Griffin intervened during a Justin Bieber meltdown at a Starbucks in West Hollywood, and slapped the young singer, it spread across social media like wildfire. Why? Because so many of us wanted it to be true.

6 Polly-Wolly Doodle. The good ship lollipop sailed into the sunset this week when the world lost one of Hollywood's earliest movie megastars in Shirley Temple. Even more surprising was the outpouring of love from people of all ages who cited Temple as their inspiration. If there's a Twitter in heaven (and let's face it, there must be), then she would be very proud of her legacy. #RIP-Shirley

7 To my wifey. I'll just say this: Whatever anyone thinks of me, it would be much worse if I didn't have you. Happy Valentine's Day. If ever there were a time to let your significant other know how special he or she is, it's today. Gift, card, candy — as long as it comes from the heart. You can make an online proclamation of affection (or mention your special someone in a newspaper column) but beware that what you're really saying is, "I ain't spending no $100 on flowers!"

Stem Cell Activator

#63

NPN 80035385.

Helps to activate naturally millions of stem cells from our own bone marrow. The increase in stem cells released from the bone marrow into the blood stream have the potential to become other types of tissue cells with specialized function. Stem cells will multiply and are able to become heart cells, liver cells or any other organ. Located everywhere in our body, stem cells are even under our skin layered between the epidermis and dermis. This is why an increase in stem cells under our skin may help to create a more youthful cell that would replenish elastin and collagen and thus may make us look younger. If our bone marrow does not produce enough stem cells this can result in many illnesses, especially a weak heart, kidneys, liver, pancreas, in fact all healthy functions of our body are decreased. Sufficient stem cells in our body have a great potential of self-repair and the ability to rejuvenate tissues.

Synopsis

Just in time for Valentine's Day comes Winter's Tale, the romantic time travel tale of Peter Lake (Colin Farrell), a turn-of-the-last century burglar who comes across the love of his life while robbing a mansion he thought was empty. Beverly Penn (Downton Abbey's Jessica Brown Findlay), the beautiful-but-doomed daughter of a wealthy newspaper tycoon, is a precocious and philosophical young woman with just months to live. He wants to save her, but first he must save himself from evil crime lord Pearly Soames (Russell Crowe), a brutal man who wants Lake dead. Then, in a twist suggested by the Brothers Grimm, he finds himself thrust 100 years into the future with only the faded memory of Beverly and a white guardian angel horse as company.

Lovers in a mystical time

Winter's Tale. The Reel Guys aren't buying this Colin-Farrell-fronted story of love, time travel and a flying horse

Richard: Mark, I am not a cold-hearted man. I like love stories as much as anyone and, as a fan of Say Anything, almost well up whenever I hear Peter Gabriel's In Your Eyes. But the sledgehammer romance of Winter's Tale left me feeling bruised rather than buoyed. The mix of metaphysical romance, magic realism and demonic revenge is a strange stew that worked well in the book by Mark Helprin but seems to have lost something in the translation to the screen. I feel the sight of Colin Farrell flying above New York on a winged Pegasus is best left in the mind's eye.

Mark: Richard, sometime in the '80s, I was dating a girl who gave me a copy of the book, which she said was the "greatest novel of all time." I read about a third of it, tossed it on the floor, and subsequently broke up with her. So obviously the story, with its magic/tragic, hocus/pocus view of romance isn't for me. This is not a poorly made movie. It's lovely to look at, has some fine acting, and has a lot of good dialogue mixed in with the bad. But Richard, there's a magic horse in it. That horse will separate those who will be enthralled by the film from those who think it's embarrassing hooey. Guess which group I fall into?

RC: I'm with you on the Pegasus and it's a credit to the charm of Colin Farrell and Findlay that the romantic side of the tale comes alive at all. The first meeting between Peter and Beverly, over a cup of tea, is simple, effective and bristles with starry-eyed tension. More of that and less of the magic horse and I might have bought into the story. As it was I felt like I was strapped to a chair and force-fed all the Valentine's Day episodes of Touched by an Angel. What did you make of Russell Crowe? He seemed like he was having fun with his demonic gangster routine, but did it work for this movie?

MB: Yes, Crowe is one of the things in the movie that worked for me. It was the casting of his boss that was ridiculous, a preposterous cameo that threw off the already precarious balance of the film. When he came onscreen, there was no turning back from its silliness. But even if I accept the movie on its own ridiculous terms, it still has a major problem. It's like a two act play, but the two halves don't cleave together. The second act, which happens in present day New York, feels rushed and arbitrary. At least the first act takes some time building characters and mood. What did you think of the female lead, Jessica Brown Finlay?

RC: She's beautiful, a little frail and doesn't get buried by the schmaltz. I thought she was nicely cast.

MB: As was William Hurt. Always nice to see him working again.

The Danes eye Oscar again

The Hunt. Story about a modern day witch hunt, starring Mads Mikkelsen, in running for best foreign film

The Hunt's director originally imagined a young Robert de Niro in Mads Mikkelsen's role.
CONTRIBUTED

When Danish director Thomas Vinterberg wrote the script for The Hunt — one of this year's contenders for best foreign language film — he pictured a young Robert de Niro as the lonely teacher whose life crumbles because of an innocent lie.

But when fellow Dane Mads Mikkelsen, known for his roles as the icy villain in the James Bond movie Casino Royale and the brilliantly evil Hannibal Lecter on TV's Hannibal, signed on, his vision changed.

"It was really awesome when I got Mads," he said. "But I had to rewrite the script."

Vinterberg says his original idea was that the lead character, Lucas, would be a young, tough blacksmith. However, he toned it down and turned him into a humble, quiet kindergarten teacher, popular with the children.

The small-town teacher becomes the victim of a modern witch hunt over a five-year-old's false accusation of pedophilia.

"I changed it because I thought it would be a much more interesting combination," he said.

Vinterberg won't speculate about the chances of his film winning the Academy Award, which would be Denmark's fourth foreign-language Oscar.

The small Scandinavian country's reputation for filmmaking could help his chances.

Gabriel Axel, who died Sunday, won Denmark's first foreign film Oscar for Babette's Feast in 1987 and Bille August's Pelle the Conqueror won the award a year later.

Susanne Bier was the 2011 winner with In a Better World.

And enfant terrible director Lars von Trier has brought Danish films a whole new audience.

Vinterberg himself broke into the international spotlight some 16 years ago for The Celebration, a twisted family drama that won the Special Jury Prize at Cannes in 1998.

Its minimalist production techniques shared with Von Trier — hand-held cameras, no props, lighting or special effects — gave him a reputation as a director to watch.

Now, having abandoned those techniques, he may get one of film's top awards.

Rolling Stone's Hoffman cover swap brings out the worst in 'disgusted' Drake

THE WORD
Dorothy Robinson
scene@metronews.ca

Drake has a little problem with Rolling Stone. The rapper has now sworn off magazine interviews after he claims Rolling Stone tossed his cover for the late Philip Seymour Hoffman for this month's issue — and misquoted him regarding his "mentor" Kanye West's Yeezus" album.

"There were some real questionable bars on there. Like that Swaghili line? Come on, man. Even Fabolous wouldn't say some s— like that," he supposedly said, which the mag then printed. Drake took to Twitter to recant the line. "I never commented on Yeezus for my interview portion of Rolling Stone," he wrote. "They also took my cover from me last minute and ran the issue."

Regarding the "took my cover" mention — that's media speak for Drake being promised the cover in exchange for the interview.

He was apparently then bumped by the editors for Hoffman. "I'm disgusted with that. RIP to Phillip Seymour Hoffman. All respect due. But the press is evil," he wrote (it should be noted that all of Drake's tweets have since been deleted). "I'm done doing interviews for magazines. I just want to give my music to the people. That's the only way my message gets across accurately." That, or Twitter.

Afternoon delight not so delightful for Farrell since jumping on the wagon

Colin Farrell admits adjusting to a life of sobriety eight years ago was a bit daunting. "I was worried I wouldn't be able to talk, full stop," he tells Elle magazine. "I hadn't uttered a word sober in about 15 years." But that wasn't all he was worried about tackling without the help of a drink. "I made love to a woman about two and a half years after I got clean, and it was one of the most terrifying moments of my life," he says. "It was in the afternoon. The windows and the curtains were open. It was lovely and, to be crass, it wasn't f— ing. She was very gentle. But it was terrifying. Because I was just used to drunkenness and dark rooms and clubs and toilets and wherever."

Lil' Kim shows off lil' bump

Look out, world. Lil' Kim is going to be a mom. The notorious rapper debuted a growing baby bump at The Blonds' Fashion Week after-party in New York earlier this week, telling Us Weekly, "I'm so excited. I'm a few months along. I can't wait to be a mom!" Kim is keeping the father's identity under wraps for now, and she has no plans of slowing down. "I'm still going to work," she says. "I'm still going to be hardcore. The baby has made me even more of a beast."

Seek adventure in the great outdoors

KELLY PUTTER
For Metro

Chilly as the fresh air is this February, nothing beats gathering up the family for a bit of al fresco fun. So grab your coat and get your hat. Let the flurries and falling temperatures inspire you to seek joy and adventure in the great outdoors.

Play along with the world's six million other geocachers who engage in this outdoor game of hide and seek that is driven by GPS-enabled devices. A geocache is a small waterproof container that holds a logbook and small trinkets. Geocachers hide them in a wide variety of outdoor locations all over the world and participants use co-ordinates posted on the Internet to help them find the cache.

Visit a maple syrup farm. Experience nature's bounty along the trail of a sugar bush. Or take a horse-drawn ride among the maples. See how maple syrup is tapped. Dine on pancakes and syrup and capture that sense of good old-fashioned fun.

Skate on a natural outdoor ice rink. That's an experience everyone should have at least once in their lives. Live near a pond, canal or creek? Consider one of the best fresh-air exercises winter has to offer. Grab a puck and a hockey stick and turn your family fun into a game of shinny.

Try snowshoeing. Think of this as hiking in the snow. Hear the crunch as your family stomps over snow-covered ground decked out in oversized snowshoes attached to your soles. Poles offer added support. This is great exercise for anyone who can walk.

Let the Sochi Winter Olympics inspire you as you take the family snowboarding or skiing. Purchase medals from a dollar store to reward everything from best athlete and worst fall to most gracious non-complainer. The snow-covered slopes and hills await.

Build a snowwoman. Make hair out of branches or crown with a beret or tiara. Hang cherries for earrings. Shape curves at the waist and hips and don't forget the lipstick — big bright slices of orange.

Activities. Put your imagination to the test

If you are inclined to spend your Family Day indoors, put your imagination to the test and aim for high drama and memorable escapades.

Here are a few suggestions to get you started:

Introduce your little Monets to the world of art. Let them view sculptures, oil paintings and water colours up close and personal at your local art gallery. Even if you are in a small city or town, many municipal buildings such as libraries house art displays from area artists or students. Don't forget your magnifying glass.

Lend a hand or two or three. Find out what a favourite local charity is doing and offer to pitch in. If that means painting a float for the Easter parade, collecting canned goods for the food bank or gathering together a care package for someone in need, volunteer your family's time and talents. That's sure to warm all hearts involved.

Watch your child's green thumb develop as they plant a seed and watch it grow. SARRA22/SHUTTERSTOCK

Being in the kitchen with your children is a great way to connect and learn about each other. SPOTMATIK/SHUTTERSTOCK

Get cooking. This is perfect for all ages. Make ice cream from snow. Learn how to roll sushi. Or bake cupcakes you can decorate. Being in the kitchen with your children is a great way to connect and learn about each other. And you get to nosh on goodies when you are done.

Plant a seed and watch it grow. Get your little ones excited about the prospect of eating food they have cultivated from the beginning. Now is the time to start planning your summer garden. Check out plant catalogues, plan out a small garden and buy seeds. Start carrots, peas and eggplant indoors and watch your child's green thumb develop right alongside the veggies. KELLY PUTTER

Happy Valentine's Day!

After Christmas, Thanksgiving and Easter, today is the biggest wine buying day of the year. And it should be. Short of keys to a new car, there's no better way to show your love than from the inside of a glass.

It's a holiday to toot the horn of sparkling wines. Not only do they pair well with just about everything, they taste sublime all by their lonesome.

Pink versions really speak to Valentine's Day, with France's Louis Bouillot "Perle d'Aurore" Crémant de Bourgogne Rosé ($19.99 - $28.29) a non-vintage, Burgundy-based fizzy that takes its production and grape blend cues from the champagne region.

Its soft, red berry flavours and delicate, crushed raspberry aromatics are a burst of summertime that will warm the winter-ravaged heart of your special someone.

If you're having a love affair with the Olympics this month, crack a Molson Canadian Victory Bottle (625 ml, $4.20 - $4.95). It's a limited edition inspired by the three litre versions given to Canadian athletes during the 2010 games in Vancouver. PRICES REFLECT THE RANGE ACROSS THE COUNTRY. Canada fights off early jitters

Men's hockey. Canucks overcome slow start to dominate Norway

Several minutes after Norway took the ice for its pre-game warm-up on Thursday, pucks still hadn't arrived. Players skated or just stood around waiting.

It turned out to be a preview of the second period, when Team Canada found its groove after a slow start and simply dominated the Norwegians on its way to a 3-1 victory in its opening game of the Olympic men's hockey tournament.

It was a stark contrast from Canada's scoreless, sluggish first period, which players attributed to nerves more than any technical adjustments.

Mentally, though, it was like a switch got flipped.

"You're playing your first game and everyone's probably thinking about where they need to be and systems — probably a thousand things going through their minds," captain Sidney Crosby said. "I think just once we settled in and realized how we play and how we need to play, we started to get some good results."

Canada, which got goals from Shea Weber and Jamie Benn during the second and one from Drew Doughty later to provide insurance, was tenuous at best and sloppy at worst early on. Being unsure of the big ice, of new teammates, of unfamiliar opponents, led to pucks hopping over sticks and players going offside at inopportune times.

Getting quality shots wasn't possible because the puck wasn't getting into prime scoring areas.

"I thought in the first period we didn't execute as well as we'd like," coach Mike Babcock said. "I thought we tried hard, didn't execute."

Babcock-coached teams are all about detail-oriented execution. When that was lacking, Norway was able to use tight, five-man units to frustrate the Canadians and keep them off the scoreboard.

Some of the credit has to go to Norway, but the proof of Canada's control over this game came almost immediately after the first intermission. Suddenly the puck was only in the offensive zone, and it looked like the NHL stars were toying with inferior competition.

"We probably calmed down, played our game a little more, kept pucks in, hunted really good, put pucks on net and went there — found rebounds, second chances and really controlled the puck, controlled the pace," winger Chris Kunitz said.

Thrill of chase inspires Chan

As the most dominant skater on the planet for the past three years, Patrick Chan has been peering over his shoulder, skating with a target on his back that had grown increasingly heavy.

Canada's three-time world champion goes into Friday's long program at the Sochi Olympics in second place, looking at someone else's back for a change — and it's a position the Toronto skater doesn't mind at all.

"I like being in second, I like being in the chase. It's exciting," Chan said afterward — sounding more relaxed post-competition than he has in a while.

Yuzuru Hanyu — a 19-year-old Japanese phenom who lives and trains in Toronto — won the short program with a whopping world-record 101.45 points, making him the first man in history to break the 100-point barrier.

The 23-year-old Chan, who's gunning for Canada's first-ever Olympic gold in men's singles, scored 97.52, landing a beautiful quadruple toe loop-triple toe loop combination to open the program. But he slightly over-rotated a triple Axel that was so big it got away from him.

Chan is well ahead of third-place Javier Fernandez of Spain (86.98), setting up virtually a two-man race Friday for gold.

It was a rough night for Canada's other two skaters. Kevin Reynolds of Coquitlam, B.C., was 17th in the short program after falling twice. Liam Firus of North Vancouver, B.C., was 28th and didn't qualify for the long program.

Chan's night, by comparison, wasn't nearly so dramatic. He felt relieved he didn't fall on his triple Axel, saying he could tell when he looked on the replay that he "had way more height than normal."

But Chan's performance was otherwise flawless.

Chan has been No. 1 in the world since winning the 2011 world championship in Moscow by a margin so wide it was like he was skating in a one-man field. But through two more world titles, the margin of victory had narrowed, and the pressure on the Canadian increased.

And in December, the upstart Hanyu topped the Canadian at the Grand Prix Final — Chan's first loss against a full international field in three years.

When asked if Hanyu will feel the weight of a target, Chan said: "Absolutely."

THE CANADIAN PRESS

Sizing up his new rival

"Yuzuru has a target that he's not used to having. And at the Olympics the target is double in size."

Canadian Olympian Patrick Chan explains why it will be difficult for his opponent to prevail.

Back injury forces Plushenko's exit

Evgeni Plushenko withdrew for medical reasons Thursday from the men's figure skating competition at the Sochi Olympics.

The four-time medallist fell on a triple Axel during warm-ups for the short program and immediately grabbed his back. He attempted another Axel, botched it, and then skated to the event referee and withdrew.

Lone Filipino. A brush with greatness spurs Martinez

Michael Christian Martinez used to study Canada's Patrick Chan on YouTube.

In Sochi, the Filipino teen got the real deal.

The 17-year-old figure skater is the lone member of the Philippines Olympic team, and because he and Chan were the first two skaters to arrive in Sochi, they found themselves alone together during several practice sessions.

The Toronto skater befriended Martinez, gave him some pointers and even invited him to dinner.

"It felt really great," Martinez said, with a big grin. "I feel like a champion because I'm skating with Patrick Chan, and I feel like a world champion also."

Whatever instruction Chan provided certainly helped. On Thursday, Martinez finished 19th in the men's short and qualified for Friday's long program.

Martinez, the first Olympic figure skater from Southeast Asia, was born in Paranaque City and took up the sport after seeing people skating at a mall — one of just three rinks in the Philippines. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Speedskating. Veteran athlete entered Sochi without any medals from World Cup season

Christine Nesbitt finished far off the Olympic podium Thursday in a race she once dominated. It was a disappointing chapter in a frustrating season for the Canadian speedskater.

The 26-year-old from London, Ont., finished ninth in the 1,000 metres at Adler Arena after winning Olympic gold in the distance four years ago.

The opposing skater in Nesbitt's pairing, China's Zhang Hong, won gold for her country's first long-track medal. Zhang's time of one minute 14.02 seconds was almost seven-tenths quicker than the field.

ADRIAN WYLD/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Ireen Wust of the Netherlands was .67 seconds back and teammate Margot Boer .87 behind for silver and bronze respectively to bring the number of Dutch speedskating medals to a dozen.

It was more hope than expectation Nesbitt would stand on the podium again in Sochi, because she hadn't won a medal this World Cup season.

"It's been such a crappy season, excuse my language, and every time I feel like I'm getting better something's happened or I haven't quite figured something out," Nesbitt said.

Post-2010, Nesbitt earned multiple World Cup titles and set a world record of 1:12.68 in January, 2012.

So when she opened her season at home in November more than two seconds off that time, Nesbitt looked bewildered.

"I don't really want to talk about it," Nesbitt said after the 1,000 metre. "I still have the 1,500 in a few days and the team pursuit coming up."

Canada loses some momentum in Sochi

Shut out of the medals Thursday, other countries caught and passed Canada at the 2014 Winter Games.

It was the first day Canada didn't win at least one medal.

With just one in the last two days, the Canadian team stalled at 10 and was tied with Germany.

Russia leapfrogged Canada to 11, and the United States and the Netherlands jumped ahead to 12. Norway remained the frontrunner at 13.

Canada's goal is to top the overall medal count in Sochi after finishing third with 26 in 2010. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Curling. Canada back above .500 after shaky start in Russia

Brad Jacobs' rink continued its comeback at the Olympic curling competition Thursday, defeating Denmark 7-6 to improve to 3-2.

After back-to-back losses to Switzerland and Sweden, the Canadian men righted themselves with wins over Russia and Denmark.

"I think we're back on track," said Canadian lead Ryan Harnden. "We're still not playing to the best of our abilities, but we're getting there. We'll build off this one and just move on to tomorrow

"We're getting better," added Jacobs. "I really think we played really well in the last four games. We're learning each and every game and we're bringing a lot more intensity out there, which is what we need to do."

The Danes led 2-1 after three ends before Canada scored two in the fourth and sixth — with the Danes scoring one in the fifth — to lead 5-3. Danish skip Rasmus Stjerne pulled one back in the seventh to cut the deficit to 5-4 but Jacobs responded in the eighth to make it 6-4.

A two by Denmark (2-3) sent it tied at 6-6 into the 10th.

Canadian third Ryan Fry cleared two guards and Danish counterpart Johnny Frederiksen hogged his attempt to place a guard. Stjerne sent his last shot through the house, setting the scene for Jacobs to draw for the winning point.

CFL. Butler leaving Riders for a spot closer to home

Craig Butler swears he won't be showing off his Grey Cup ring in the Hamilton Tiger-Cats' dressing room.

But the Canadian defensive back, who signed a three-year contract with Hamilton after spending his first three CFL seasons with the Saskatchewan Roughriders, promises he'll bring his winning attitude to a team he feels is already on a roll.

"I want to bring some leadership to the team," said the 25-year-old native of London, Ont., and former Western Ontario Mustangs star.

It's probably best to keep the ring under wraps. It would only rub salt in a wound after Hamilton lost the championship game 45-23 to the Roughriders.

Butler was a big part of their success. He led the Grey Cup champions last season with 60 tackles and also had four interceptions and is happy to list his strengths.

Butler was among the three free-agent signings Hamilton unveiled Thursday. The others included: defensive back Brandon Stewart from the Winnipeg Blue Bombers and offensive lineman Steve Myddelton from the B.C. Lions.

Hamilton has also signed import receiver Cary Koch from the Edmonton Eskimos and former Roughriders linebacker Abraham Kromah. The club re-signed Canadian linebacker Marc Beswick, the East Division's top special-teams player last year on Tuesday.

NBA All-Star Weekend

"It's obviously something that nobody has done before and I was presented with the opportunity, and they're all events that I feel like I'm capable of competing in, so I figured, why not make history?"

Portland Trail Blazers guard Damian Lillard in an interview with the Trail Blazers' website. Lillard will become the first player to compete in five events at NBA All-Star Weekend. A first-time All-Star selection, he'll also take part in the Rising Stars Challenge for rookies and second-year players, will defend his title in the Skills Challenge, and is entered in the dunk and three-point contests.

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
Although today's full moon takes place in your fellow Fire sign of Aries you could still get emotional and say things you later regret, so bite your tongue and keep your feelings to yourself — for now.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You like to aim high but sometimes you wonder if it's worth the effort. Only you can decide but today is not a good time to make decisions concerning either your career or your family.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Today's full moon makes minor disputes seem bigger than they actually are, but now that you know that you can make a conscious effort not to take what you see and hear seriously.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
What looks confusing now will seem logical come the start of next week, so no matter what happens over the next two or three days, don't let it worry you. That applies especially to money matters.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Try not to jump to conclusions today because either your grasp of the facts is wrong or you are looking at them through an emotional haze.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
As today's full moon occurs in the most sensitive area of your chart, things you could not usually care less about will worry you. Provided you don't act on those worries everything will be fine.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
It may be annoying that someone is dragging their feet but don't make an issue of it. The full moon means you just have to accept that not everyone thinks or moves or acts as fast as you.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
It seems you're having second thoughts about a career move. You want to move up in the world, of course, but is this the route you should be taking? Think about it but don't make any decisions until next week.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
If you do things for others that they should be doing for themselves it won't be long before they expect you to do it all. Let others know that they need to take more responsibility for themselves.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
It seems you'd rather go on making mistakes than admit you're on the wrong track. Your fixity of purpose is often a great strength but not when you so obviously need to change direction.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Today's full moon can either be a positive or a negative influence, depending on how you choose to react to people who annoy you. No matter what they do or say, just smile.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
What you have been doing is good but the way you have been doing it is bad and today's full moon will in some way highlight that fact.
